"LIGHTS, CAMERA, ACTION!"

AND COMES THE NEXT DAY...

PERMANENTLY YOURS!

"AND WHAT'S MORE," said Joyce Bradbury, curling her upper lip and talking with that maddeningly superior drawl of hers, too! I do detest that sloppy, ungroomed look, don't you?" And she looked straight at Nancy's chestnut mane.

"Ulp...I mean sure...I think that's wonderful," Nancy replied, with more feeling than sense. As soon as she could, she tore herself away from that drawling voice.

Alone in her room, Nancy made for the candy box at the back of her dresser drawer. Inside that box, scented with lavender, were her hankies and...her savings! Throughout the months, Nancy had been putting away little dribs and drabs of money, some out of her allowance and some that she'd earned baby-sitting or doing errands. She'd meant to go right on saving, of course, but not now...not after those vicious, nasty insinuations of snobbish Joyce Bradbury!

"Thinks she's so wonderful!" Nancy thought resentfully. "Always making cracks about how gorgeous her new clothes are and getting her hair and nails done! Well, I don't care if it costs me all the money I've saved! I'm going to get a permanent, too! And in time for the dance! So there!"

To tell the truth, Nancy's conscience hurt just a little as she hastened towards the pretty striped awning that marked "The Beauty Spot". There were so many things to do with her savings...that tobacco for dad...that book for mother...records for Roger...

"But this is more important!" Nancy gritted her teeth. "If Joyce Bradbury thinks she's going to get a chance to make fun of me at the dance Saturday, well, she just won't!" To the receptionist at the beauty salon, Nancy was just another teen-ager preparing for a silly school dance. She simply announced calmly that there was no opening on the book for a permanent wave. None!

"Sorry, miss, but we've just closed the book. You can see for yourself." What Nancy saw made her heart beat even more furiously. Joyce Bradbury had snared the last appointment!

Determined, Nancy strode to the nearest cosmetic counter and demanded a home permanent kit. If it killed her, she'd have just as thrilling a hairdo as Joyce Bradbury. She clutched her package tightly as she raced home, slipping the instruction sheet out of the box and reading as she ran.

Poor Nancy! Her eagerness was her undoing, for with her eyes glued to the illustrations of how to roll back curls, how could she see that Bobby's roller skates were resting on the front steps? Crash! Down went Nancy, home permanent kit and all, and down went her hopes for a snazzy hairdo! With tears of frustration in her eyes, Nancy announced to the world at large, "I give up! I'll go to the dance as I am and have a terrible time! I wish I were dead!"

But that's what Nancy said on Friday! On Saturday, gliding smoothly across the dance floor in Roger's arms, she smiled serenely, her face glowing, as Roger looked at her in rapt admiration. "You may not know it, but you're the prettiest girl here. In fact, you're the prettiest girl in town! Your eyes are so big and melty and your hair's so soft and silky, like a pony's mane! I hate those fancy curls some girls wear!"

"Thanks, Roger," Nancy said demurely. Over his shoulder, she could see a frizzled topknot adorning an angry face. Joyce Bradbury's! Nancy was too nice to gloat. She simply said, "I... I bought you some records, Rog!"

THREE CHEERS for ROMANCE!

"YOU PROMISED, Biff Small! You know you did!" Liza Burton stared accusingly at Biff, her brown eyes full of anger. "You said you'd take me to the club dance whenever it was! And it's tonight!"

"Gosh, Liza, I know I did," Biff admitted ruefully. "But I didn't know it'd be the night before the big game. And I've gotta get a full night's rest an' sleep, you know that! It's Coach's orders! I...I'm sorry, Liza, but I just can't take you out tonight!"

Even the look of misery on his face did not stop Liza from being bad-tempered. She had told so many of the girls she was going to the club dance and now...now she'd be humiliated! "All right, Biff," she snapped, "if that's how little a promise means to you, you can just forget about taking me to the club dance! Or any other dance! Ever!"

Turning her back on Biff, she flounced off. She could hear him calling her name, but she did not bother to turn around. If Biff wanted to be mean and selfish, why, so could she be mean and selfish! And he had promised! She would never talk to him again, if that was all his promises meant!

It took a while for Liza to simmer down, but as the evening wore on, she became more and more thoughtful. Despite herself, she kept remembering all the nice dates she and Biff had had! And all the nice things he'd sent her...and how swell he'd been when she was sick...and the time he called for her in the rain...and the time she was locked out of the house accidentally...and the time...

The next day dawned bright and clear. A swell day for the game! Liza, in her short red skirt and navy-blue turtle-necked sweater, stood facing the cheering section of Valley High School, ready to cheer her team...and Biff...on to victory!

But something was wrong with Biff! Was he sick or something? He didn't seem to have his heart in the game at all! Why, the last time he'd run with the ball, he'd only gotten about two feet towards the goal line before he'd been tackled! And he needn't have been, if he'd just put some fight into his game! That was it! Biff didn't seem to have any fight in him!

A sudden thought came to Liza, along with a sudden feeling of guilt. Perhaps she had taken the spirit out of Biff, Valley's star player! Hastily, she called to her cheering section and then, raising her arms, she shouted, "Let's go!"

Across the field, the words of the cheer rang out, loud and clear.

"I was angry,
I was wrong!
Hit 'em hard,
Hit 'em strong!
I take back every word I said,
Get in there, Biff, and knock
'em dead!"

Biff's head went up and he grinned. A real grin! Then his shoulders went back and he went into action. As Valley High's score climbed, so did Liza's spirits! She'd have plenty of time to tell Biff how she really felt at the Victory Dance! Of course, she'd be going with him!
